

Demosthenes Lorandos, William Bernet, and SR Sauber (2013) Parental Alienation: Handbook for Mental Health and Legal Professionals

Wilfrid Von Boch-Galhau^{1*}, Christiane Förster² and Jorge Guerra González³

¹Specialist in Psychiatry, Psychosomatic Medicine and Psychotherapy, Private Psychotherapeutic Practise, Würzburg, Germany

²Psychotherapy Practice, Psychological Expert for the Courts, Würzburg, Germany

³Research Assistant, Leuphana University of Lüneburg, Guardian ad litem, Family Mediator, Germany

*Corresponding Author: Wilfrid Von Boch-Galhau, Specialist in Psychiatry, Psychosomatic Medicine and Psychotherapy, Private Psychotherapeutic Practise, Würzburg, Germany.

Received: July 10, 2018; Published: July 31, 2018

Parental Alienation is an important mental condition that professionals in the field especially those who work with children, adolescents and adults from divorced families should know. Although about thousand three hundred professional articles, book chapters and books, and also empirical studies, exist meanwhile (see website www.mc.vanderbilt.edu/pasg.) from all over the world, there is still considerable controversy about the existence of Parental Alienation.

According to DSM-5, parental alienation (PA) is a clinically relevant “parent-child relational problem” that has a considerable impact on the affected children. The term “parental alienation” is not officially recognised everywhere, which is why this disorder has so far not been given a generally valid name. That is the reason why the American Psychiatric Association (APA) has so far not explicitly included the term “parental alienation” in the DSM-5. Whereas in a statement of the World Health Organization (WHO), within “Caregiver child relational problem”, code QE52.0, Parental Alienation is mentioned in ICD-11. (<https://icd.who.int/dev11/l-m/en#/http://id.who.int/icd/entity/547677013>).

Some scholars refer to “parental alienation syndrome” [1-3], others to the “alienated child” [4], “pathological alienation” [5], “programmed and brainwashed children” [6,7], “pathological alignment” [8,9], or to “parental alienation disorder” [10] or “parental alienation” [11].

In a severe case of parental alienation, a child will radically and without objective reasons refuse contact with one parent - father or mother (this is not a gender-specific issue) - with whom s/he previously had a loving attachment, because s/he has internalised a false negative image of the parent. This is usually found in the context of highly acrimonious separation or divorce of the child’s parents. The ultimate authority who can either stop the alienation process or perpetuate it, is the family court in cooperation with a specialised psychological/psychiatric family court expert.

The lack of recognition of parental alienation as a serious relational disorder in professional practice makes it difficult to adequately deal with it in parent-child law. A lack of awareness of the disorder in the political arena, in society, and among professionals increases the risk for the child to develop externalising or internalising psychological symptoms as listed in ICD-10, Chapter V; these may be conduct disorders, anxieties, depressive episodes, or attachment - and identity disorders and others.

The book Parental Alienation: The Handbook for Mental Health and Legal Professionals [12] is therefore an excellent tool for professionals working in the field of parent-child law, helping them to deal with parental alienation. Decision-makers often face questions of what symptoms would help them recognise such a pathological process early; when to intervene and how; or whether there might be other reasons for an attitude of rejection. With its many case observations, this interdisciplinary textbook provides a wide range of well-illustrated and practical examples as well as offering possible solutions. The thirteen contributors are scholars, researchers and professionals in medicine, psychology and law, from the United States, Canada, Brazil and Germany. Drawing on extensive experience with parental alienation, they give an overview of the current state of research and global developments. The CD that comes with the handbook contains more than 1,000 scientifically relevant literature references from 36 countries and 25 sample court applications. It also discusses roughly 500 court cases from the United States and Canada, where expert psychologists or judges cited evidence of parental alienation in their decisions.

Chapters 2 to 5 deal extensively with diagnosis including differential diagnosis, and specific guidelines for treatment, each for a specific level of severity (mild, moderate, severe). They are illustrated using case examples. Chapter 6 discusses the handling of accusations of sexual abuse in the context of conflicts relating to custody and access rights. Chapter 7, "Reunification Planning and Therapy" presents an effective approach to rebuilding family relationships, even in seemingly hopeless cases where contact has been lost for many years. Chapter 8 describes from start to finish a highly complex custody conflict with parental alienation and alleged physical abuse. This case is used to explain in detail the methods for the pre-trial preparation of criminal and family law proceedings. Factual evidence from the case are combined with evidence-based scientific data on the manipulation of children's memory, the suggestibility of children, the impact of interview techniques, and delayed statements by children. The chapter clearly highlights the contrast between legal practice in the United States and in other countries like for instance in Germany or in England, as well as demonstrating the need for scientifically sound methods to separate the "wheat from the chaff" (real vs. false memories). Many US and Canadian family courts (see the case studies in Chapter 12 and on the accompanying CD) recognise parental alienation as a valid and reliable scientific concept, based on the statements and opinions of experts from clinical, medical and psychological research. Chapter 13 cites examples from different continents to show that parental alienation is a global phenomenon. It describes, for instance, the developments in Europe, including rulings on parental alienation by the Strasbourg-based European Court of Human Rights (ECHR). One section of the chapter discusses in detail the situation in Germany, where internationally known (peer-reviewed) publications on parental alienation are still not receiving enough attention. Chapter 14 discusses in detail the 2010 Brazilian law L12318 on parental alienation, which is intended to counteract early the effects of the alienation process. In Chapter 16, an experienced family judge relates how difficult and unpopular cases involving parental alienation are. She presents strategies for lawyers and judges to successfully resolve such cases, which, however, require the acquisition of specialist knowledge.

This book is currently the most up-to-date publication on parental alienation and recommended for all professionals dealing with children in high-conflict divorces - anywhere in the world! Political actors and the World Health Organisation (WHO) could do much to help stop parental alienation from spreading further with rising divorce rates [13,14].

P.S.: "A version of ICD-11 was released on 18 June 2018 to allow Member States to prepare for implementation, including translating ICD into their national languages. ICD-11 will be submitted to the 144th Executive Board Meeting in January 2019 and the Seventy-second World Health Assembly in May 2019 and, following endorsement, Member States will start reporting using ICD-11 on 1 January 2022". see: <http://www.who.int/classifications/icd/en/>.

Bibliography

1. Gardner RA. „Recent trends in divorce and custody litigation“. The Academy Forum 29.2 (1985): 3-7.
2. Gardner RA. „The Parental Alienation Syndrome (2nd edition)“. Creative Therapeutics, Cresskill, NJ (1998).
3. Kopetski L., et al. "The spectrum of Parental Alienation Syndrome, (Part III): The Kopetski Follow-Up Study". American Journal of Forensic Psychology 23.1 (2005): 15-43.
4. Kelly JB and Johnston JR. "The Alienated Child, A Reformulation of Parental Alienation Syndrome". Family Court Review 39.3 (2001): 249-266.

5. Warshak RA. „Social Science and Parental Alienation: Examining the Disputes and the Evidence“. In: Gardner RA, Sauber SR and Lorandos D (Eds.), International Handbook of Parental Alienation Syndrome, C. C. Thomas Publ., Springfield, IL (2006): 352-371.
6. Clawar SS and Rivlin BV. „Children Held Hostage. Dealing with Programmed and Brainwashed Children“. American Bar Association, Division of Family Law, Chicago (1991).
7. Clawar SS and Rivlin BV. „Children Held Hostage, Identifying Brainwashed Children, Presenting a Case, and Crafting Solutions“. American Bar Association, Division of Family Law, Chicago (2013).
8. Wallerstein JS and Kelly JB. „Surviving the Breakup: How Children and Parents Cope with Divorce“. Basic Book, New York, NY (1980).
9. Johnston JR and Roseby V. „In the name of the child: A developmental approach to understanding and helping children of conflicted and violent divorce“. Free Press, New York (1997).
10. Bernet W. „Parental Alienation Disorder and DSM-V“. American Journal of Family Therapy 36.5 (2008): 349-366.
11. Bernet W, et al. „Parental Alienation, DSM-5 and ICD-11“. American Journal of Family Therapy 38.2 (2010): 76-187.
12. Lorandos D, et al. „Parental Alienation: The Handbook for Mental Health and Legal Professionals“. C. C. Thomas, Springfield, IL (2013).
13. Boch-Galhau W von. Parental Alienation and Parental Alienation Syndrome/Disorder - A serious form of psychological child abuse - with case examples - Verlag Wissenschaft und Bildung, Berlin (2013).
14. Boch-Galhau W von, et al. „The Parental Alienation Syndrome (PAS) - An Interdisciplinary Challenge for Professionals Involved with Divorce [German and English]“. Verlag Wissenschaft und Bildung (VWB), Berlin (2003).

Volume 7 Issue 8 August 2018

© All rights reserved by Wilfrid Von Boch-Galhau, et al.